Spring Cleaning

Getting The House Ready For The Summer Hamptons Social Season

By Dan Rattiner

So here it is April and all of us, including the teenagers, are working on this big Spring cleaning. It lasts all Saturday afternoon and much of Sunday, but the temperature is in the high fifties here in East Hampton and everyone is in a happy mood. By the end of Sunday all this stuff is in a huge pile out back by the garbage bins, two broken tables, some broken lamps, old filing cabinets, doors and window frames and other assorted things we don't need anymore. Also a whole lot of garbage. It's so much that I couldn't even fit it all into my SUV to take it to the dump. It requires the services of a man with a truck, something I vow to take care of when I get to work Monday morning in Bridgehampton.

At a quarter to nine the following morning, therefore, I am in good clothes, a briefcase under my arm, leaving the house to go out to the SUV for the fifteen minute drive to work. It is a beautiful day.

And then, out of the corner of my eye over by the dump, I see the four Pela chairs. These had been the source of some minor contention the day before. We had gotten new lawn furniture. They would replace the Pela chairs which were old and broken. Or at least two of the five were old and broken.

At first, we relegated the Pela chairs to an upper deck at the back of our house. Then it was decided pull them off to one side. When I got home I'd take them upstairs to the back deck.

Now here I am standing outside my front door — I have a 9 a.m. appointment I will just barely be on time for — and the Pela chairs beckon. Here is what I think. Can this wait 'til I get home?

When does our regular garbage man come? Is it this morning? I forget. He'll take the Pelas. A real prize.

And so I set down my briefcase and go over and commence to take the few minutes to drag the Pelas over to beside the garage. The first one goes okay. There is a broken painter's easel leaning against it that I throw off. Then I come back for the second one. A broken closet slider door that we have been saving for ten years since it got ripped off its hinges is leaning against it. I'm in a hurry. I give the chair a pull.

Now here's the interesting part. Which explains why I am in my SUV driving to work reeking of booze and why I have to, shortly after the meeting, call the dump guy and explain things so he won't hurt himself.

we should throw them out and they were carted to the big dump pile. Then, that night, I had second thoughts about the Pela chairs — they had been given to me by my mother fifteen years ago and so had sentimental value — and so Cathie had said well, either put them back up on the back deck or throw them out, make up your mind. I had decided that when I went to work on Monday morning, I would drag them out of the pile and Designer Betsey Johnson has signed on to do a new summer column for the new Dan's Papers glossy centerpiece magazine SouthOfTheHighway, scheduled to debut Memorial Day weekend. You read it here first.

East Hampton's Kurt Wenzel makes his debut as a novelist with the publication, by Random House, of Lit Life, a comedy set in Manhattan and the Hamptons.

Another book about the Hamptons will debut on July 3. Misfortune, written by Nancy Geary and published by Warner Books "exposes the seamy underside of the Hamptons' wealthy elite, a book about a world of crumbling pretenses, prejudices, and the less than fairytale lives of its inhabitants." Hey, it's only a book, guys.

The former nanny to heiresses Paris and Nicky Hilton, Diane Willgrass, is looking for a publisher for a new book about the girls. Well, maybe she was the nanny. Or maybe she was a receptionist at a store near where they lived. In any case, the Hilton girls who were little at the time, have no memory of her.

The Dan's Papers "They Made the Movie Here Film Festival" began its fifth year this past Saturday before a packed house at the Ross School in East Hampton, showing the film Blood and Sand starring Rudolph Valentino and Dreaming of You, a remarkable little film by novice filmmaker Carlos Ferrer, which got a standing ovation. Guy-Jean de Fraumeni hosts this event, assisted by Sarah Halsey. # Spring

Early on Sunday morning, I had noticed that Cathie, cleaning upstairs, had put three bottles of Mike's Hard Lemonade into a paint can. Where there might have been a fourth, there was a taller bottle, which was a half drunk bottle of Quervo Gold Tequilla with the top off. Actually, it was a half drunk bottle of Quervo Gold Tequilla and water. I'll explain.

As I mentioned, we have teenagers. They invite over their friends. We also have repair men and cleaning people. What we found on Saturday afternoon in the refrigerator there was this partially drunk bottle of Quervo Gold Tequilla which was considerably lighter in color than we had seen it a week before. We opened it and sniffed. It had almost no odor. Upon further investigation we determined it was mostly drunk then filled back up with water. It does not take a rocket scientist to figure out what was going on here.

Anyway, I am lifting up the old broken closet door with one hand and am about to pull out the Pela chair with the other when I see a small cardboard box with the three Mike's Hard Lemonades and the one Captain Morgan Rum bottle sticking up out of it. Cathie, good recycler that she is, has replaced the paint can with the cardboard box. The cardboard and the glass can be sorted over at the dump where the truck is to take all this crap.

I've got to move this project along, I thought.

I push the closet door up and off to one side, then drag out the chair. I hear a crash. The door has landed smack on top of the bottles in the box, the tallest of them having taken the brunt of the blow. I remove the door. All are intact except the Quervo Gold Tequilla which has had the top half of it shoved down into the bottom half. Booze (and water) is leaking out, getting sopped up by the cardboard. I drag the chair away.

What I figure is that the booze is going through the cardboard onto the driveway and over to a storm drain — it had begun to do this — and the best thing is to just let it do that. Soon it will all have gone away.

Then I think, wait a minute, the cardboard will soon get so soft you won't be able to pick it up. You'll pick it up and all four bottles will fall right through the bottom and smash.

And so I ditch the chair and go back quickly to the cardboard box, pick it up, and watch as rum leaks out onto my pants. I've got to throw the bottle somewhere. Next to the box there is one of those old cylindrical Pepsi Cola coolers. Remember them? They are four feet high in the shape of a Pepsi Cola can, there is a big advertisement for Pepsi Cola wrapped all around, and what you would do is truck it out when you needed it — it had little wheels — fill it with ice, then close this clear plastic dome lid to keep the cold in. Of course this one has the dome lid missing which is why we are throwing it out. Though it's perfect for throwing in the cardboard box.

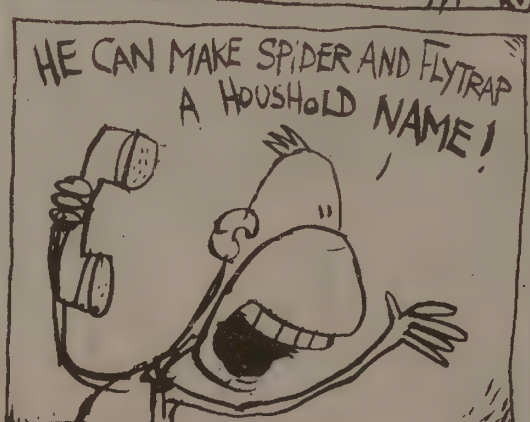

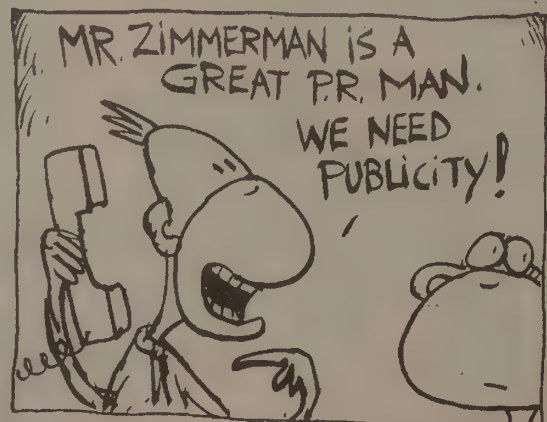

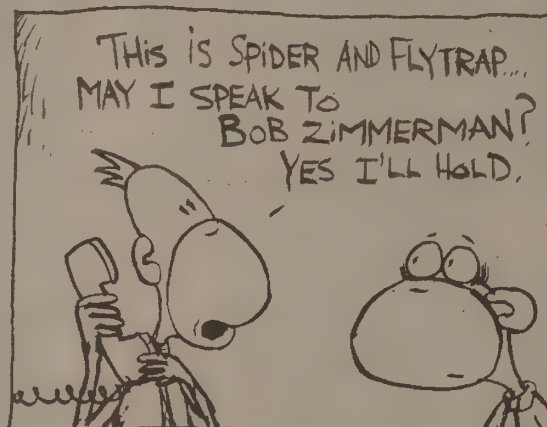

So now I make a mental note of what to say to the man with the truck when I talk to him. Here's what I will tell him so he won't get hurt. Wheel the Pepsi Cola cooler over to your truck, then carefully tip it over and let the rum out. If when you tip it the cardboard box starts to slide, stop it with your hand so the contents don't smash on the driveway. That ought to do it.

I am into the SUV and off to work. If a cop stops me, I'll walk the line, take the breathalyzer test. No, I am not drinking and driving, officer. Let me tell you the story.

PRE-SUMMER SALE

Bought your pillows & comforters elsewhere? Guaranteed you overpaid!!!

CAVEAT EMPTOR (BUYER BEWARE)

Don't be misled by advertisements for European goose down comforters at supposedly "SALE PRICES". We'll show you that most of those ads do not represent good values at all. Just because these advertisements are from major departments stores - do not be fooled-all down is not alike.

The quality of goose down is measured in fill power (also know as loft). Fill Power is the amount of cubic inches one ounce of down will fill. Our 800 plus Siberian Goose Down will fill between 800 and 850 cubic inches of space. "The Company Store" catalog always lists the fill power of their goose down. Bring in their catalog and we'll generally save you 50% off their prices.

Goose Down Comforters are an investment, with proper care a fine quality comforter will last a life time. Our high quality 100% cotton shells, or tickings, are divided into baffle boxes. The baffle box has a mesh channel separating the top from the bottom of the comforter. The baffle allows the down to give you maximum loft without collecting in one section of the comforter. We do not cater to the consumer that is more interested in price than quality. Our most valuable asset is our customer. We will only sell a product that we believe to be the highest value at the best price. Cheap low quality down should fill garage cans not pillows and comforters. All our goose down pillows and comforters contain 100% goose down even though it is legal to combine 70% down and 30% feathers and label the item 100% goose down. Remember feathers are those things with quills, down is similar to tiny balls of cotton, absolutely no hard quill. Our goose down comforters and pillows are machine washable because they only contain down.

The larger the individual down cluster the higher the fill power. The higher the fill power the better the comforter will insulate thus providing more comfort to you. Since you are spending 1/3 of your life in bed it should be as luxurious as possible. - Why not?

Still More Companies Buy "Space" On The Telephone Poles Without Our Permission

By Dan Rattiner

Because the eastern end of Long Island is considered by many to be one of the most beautiful places on the planet – it was listed recently by one of the country's leading environmental groups as one of the five best Last Great Places in the World – it presents unusual opportunities.

For example, our beaches, harbors, dunes, woods, lakes and farms may be among the greatest of places, but they are severely marred by an eyesore: telephone poles. They stick up everywhere. And the wires between them, having recently been expanded to include the internet, cable tv, cable modems, wireless telephones and fibre optics as well as the traditional telephone and electric, are in some places almost as thick as the wooden poles themselves. Falling wires are now not only a danger for electricity reasons, they are a danger simply as heavy things that could fall down and break you in half. And of course they make the place look awful.

In another part of the world, where people are not so stunned by the wonder of the landscape, it might be possible to take these eyesores for granted. Not so in the Hamptons.

I have wondered, and I have written several in Huntington Town Hall and the other at the Omni Building Teleconference Center in Uniondale (and none on the east end), to consider a proposal to raise the cost that the lighting company charges others to make attachments to their poles.

Many companies who have wires up were at the meetings, outraged that these costs, regulated by the State, might go up.

"LIPA (the electric company) is proposing a 270 percent increase in the cost to attach fiber optic wires to its poles," a spokesman for Cablevision said. "The LIPA rate scheme places the increase squarely on the backs of cable customers by adding $5 articles about this, why we don't just put all these cables underground. Heavier may be heavier. But it also means there are more companies with wires who could share in the cost of doing this.

Whatever the laws are, there has got to be a point where it becomes cheaper to do all this inside a pipe underground.

That this is now an economic possibility was brought home to me two weeks ago when two public hearings were held on Long Island, one per year in costs to cable households in LIPA areas on Long Island. We will do everything we can to fight this increase and call on the governor to review LIPA's outrageous proposal."

A LIPA spokesperson said that it costs nearly $10 million a year to operate and maintain these attachments, and at the present time, under an arrangement made in 1996, they are only allowed to collect $3.1 million. They are proposing to increase their current fees, which are $9.68 per pole for any attachment, to $18 per pole for coaxial or copper cable, $36 per pole for fiber-optic cable attachments and $45 per pole for fiber-optic attachments that need prime pole space usually reserved for electrical attachments.

Furthermore, they said, the number of pole attachments and associated wires draped between the poles is expected to double during the next five years. So if you think the heavy load of wires is bad now, you ain't seen nothin' yet. (And besides everything else, one wonders at what point these wooden poles, unchanged in their appearance for more than seventy years, will simply give out.)

And who do these people think they are, putting things on poles on private land, village and town land, state and county land and even federal land without paying us a rent for the privilege? And now they want to raise the fees they charge so they can put even more wires on?

Whatever the laws are, there has got to be a point where it becomes cheaper to do all this inside a pipe, underground. Think of all those repairmen you wouldn't need who come out in a storm to get the power back after trees have fallen on the power lines. Think of all the pruning of these trees, the butchering of them by these power authority people, to get them so far away from the powerlines that when the trees or branches fall they do so harmlessly. Why isn't anyone doing anything about this?

Isn't this beautiful place, so heavily laden with high tech gadgets, the perfect place to start a program to take down all these poles and put the wires underground?

Since it is the state that has to approve this "rate increase," — they are considering it now that there have been these public hearings — it must be the state that should take the lead in this. I have already had quite a number of people call or write because of the articles done about this. And so I am forming a group called TAKE DOWN THE POLES, at the address c/o Dan's Papers, Box 630, Bridgehampton, New York 11932. If you are interested, join up by filling out and sending in the coupon below to me. I will put together a mailing list and every week will forward every response to Governor Pataki.

Dear Governor Pataki: Please consider funding a study to take down the telephone poles in this state and move the wires underground. With so many companies using the poles, they are becoming a danger as well as an eyesore. Please enter me as a member of the group TAKE DOWN THE POLES, Box 630, Bridgehampton, New York 11932.

The Car Breaks Down But The Factory That Makes Them Cannot Be Destroyed

By Dan Rattiner

Several months ago, an editor for one of the big American dailies, the Washington Post I think it was, gave a reporter a story assignment.

"I want you to go to Yugoslavia and wander around out where NATO dropped all those bombs that got Milosevic to cry Uncle two years ago. Go to small towns. Go into ruined commercial buildings. What did we hit? Did we hit hospitals? Munitions factories? Are they now rebuilding them?"

The reporter got on a plane, flew to Belgrade, rented a car and started nosing around. In one small town, Kragujevac, the residents told him that a big car factory had been hit. It was the biggest employer in the town. Most of the men had been out there for two months after the bombs had fallen rebuilding the place, working without paychecks, to get the factory back on its feet so they'd have jobs to go to. It had been a big success story for the town.

The reporter went out to the factory – half of it was still in ruins – but somehow, miraculously, the cars were still coming off the assembly line.

"We were out of business for four months," the manager of the factory said. "Why they bombed us I don't know. All we do is make cars. Well, anyway, we're back."

The manager led the reporter to the assembly line, where, amid rubble and debris that had been carted over to one side, the hammers were banging, the welding arcs were flashing, and the cars were

From 1982 when somebody got the bright idea to import these hideous automobiles from the then Communist country of Yugoslavia, until 1987 when the last adult in America finally gave up on it, the YUGO was a Madison Avenue advertising agency dream come true. Hundreds of thousands of them got sold. Almost all of them had to be abandoned in short order by the side of the road.

Those were the days when Americans believed their government was hiding something from them. And big business was hiding something from them. Of course new cars did not have to cost so much. It was just a conspiracy between Detroit and Tokyo to keep the prices up. A man named DeLorean, a Vice President at Chrysler, believed it so much he went into business manufacturing a gull-winged sports car called the DeLorean. It was a fabulous sports car, of course. And it was only half the price of a regular sports car. That it failed was only because of something secret that Detroit did. They couldn't let something like the DeLorean succeed.

Of course, there are today Yugo websites. And Yugo clubs. There are a lot of nuts out there. But I bet not one of them has a Yugo that actually works.

moving slowly along.

At the end of the line, some men were putting the nameplates on. YUGO, they read. Yes, the single worst car in the world, after a short pause in the manufacturing process, is on the market again.

* * *

People under the age of twenty have probably never heard of a YUGO. People over the age of twenty probably wish they never heard of a YUGO.

Yugo

(You don't see DeLoreans today. Except in the Back to the Future movies. Yes, that was the car.)

And then some American businessman came back from Yugoslavia with pictures of this cute little four seat sedan that was selling like crazy in Yugoslavia. (Of course it was selling like crazy in Yugoslavia. It was the only car made in Yugoslavia. And under Communism, if you were Yugoslavian, wanted a car and were willing to wait two years to get one, this was it.)

I can put these cars up for sale in America for just $2,500, this businessman said. Four seat sedans in America were selling at that time for $11,000. This was incredible.

In Yugoslavia, they called the car the Zastava.

That wouldn't do. It was made in Yugoslavia. Madison Avenue decided it should be called the Yugo.

They came in just one color in Yugoslavia, which was grey. And so, the businessman arranged for the ones being sent to America to be painted in bright pastel colors. Yellow, orange, pink. Happy Americans were shown in TV commercials standing next to Yugos. Patting Yugos. Getting in and out of Yugos.

Of course, when you got in and out of a Yugo you had to do it very carefully. Doors would fall off new Yugos. They'd fall right to the ground.

And you wouldn't actually want to DRIVE a Yugo. Turn the key in the ignition and the ignition cylinder would jam. Or if it didn't jam, the stick shift would come off in your hand. Of course, if you could get the car to start, the muffler would fall out onto the street.

Personally, I never owned a Yugo. But friends did. Some of them had two or three. One even had four. Parts, you know. You had to have parts.

The happy upbeat TV commercials continued. More and more people bought them and abandoned them beside the road. People were getting wise. Eventually, people stopped buying them. And the Yugo dealers, yes there were Yugo dealers around the country, thousands of them, closed their doors and locked themselves in their homes. Yugos were history. A horrid part of American history.

(Of course, there are today Yugo websites. And Yugo clubs. There are lots of nuts out there. But I'll bet not one of them has a Yugo that actually works.)

Who could have known, when the Serbians invaded Kosovo, that the Yugo plant was still humming along, still turning out Yugos for the lucky people of Belgrade on its assembly line?

Probably the American military and their spy satellites, that's who. They were probably in the Pentagon one day, the decision to conduct the bombings already made, and they were looking at a spy satellite photo of the roof of the plant.

"It's the Yugo factory. Let's get it," a general said.

And so they did. A public service to humanity.

And so what if they underestimated the grit, determination and can-do attitude of the Yugoslavs in Kragujevac?

The cars, with exactly the same design they had when Marshall Tito broke a champagne bottle over the Red Star factory door in 1951, are getting churned out today. And piling up in the parking lots and fields surrounding the plant. Nobody is buying them anymore. But they are still making them. And maybe Fiat, the manager said, would be interested in taking over the Yugo company.

May God Help Us.

Welcome To Shinnecock

"Living" Museum, Fulfilling Tribe's Dream, Opens To The Public June 16

By Helga Morpurgo

Nearly two decades ago a tenacious group of Shinnecock natives began to share their dream of creating a cultural center that would allow them to preserve and recreate their own heritage, a culture that dates back 10,000 years.

"Everyone has been telling our story but us," Elizabeth Haile Thunder Bird said during an interview in January 1998, when the ground was broken at the Reservation for its "living museum."

Manifestation of this long-held dream has been gradual, developing bit by bit with each grant, donation and fundraiser that has made it possible. Yes, it took years for the dream to become a museum, but Native Americans are a patient people who weigh their actions according to the consequences on seven generations.

The 5,400 sq. ft. cultural center and museum that will be opening its doors to the public on June 16, 2001 is of spiritual significance to Native Americans because it was built with logs of white pine without the use of nails or mortar. The logs are fitted one atop the other and held in place by wooden pegs.

A curved stairwell of halved pine logs that graciously leads to a lower level was transported in one piece from Oneida where every section of the structure was built by Obomsawin artisans. The united power of 20 men positioned the staircase into place.

The simple, refined engineering of the construction alone would have been enough of a cultural experience without the magnificent, larger-than-life murals by native Shinnecock artist David Bunn Martine, whose detailed work recreates every aspect of communal life during the course of Indian history, dating as far back as the Paleolithic era and as far forward as present day portraits of living tribal members.

David Bunn Martine's larger-than-life paintings show authentic historic details in sweeping compositions that not only depict the evolution of the terrain under the effects of climate changes, but also document the mood of each evolution with brilliant and subtle color.

Painted in somber colors, the first of the murals depicts scenes of natives living in the darkness of an ice age, their shelters and clothing resembling an Eskimo-like existence.

The central focus of one huge painting is a sacred burial site where natives were buried in special ways along with their pets, possessions and the wild animals they hunted.

An articulate scholar and historian, Mr. Martine chronicles indigenous cultures in a clockwise progression throughout the main floor, showing the weapons, tools, clothing and traditions representing each of several epochs.

His remarkable gift as an artist is rivaled only by his verbal knowledge of history. Visitors are treated to authentic historic storytelling with the viewing of each mural.

The upper level will display many native artifacts, such as a small organ that had resided in the Reservation's Small Church when the church was still in existence; a hand-caned chair that had belonged to an ancestor who everyone on the Reservation had once known; a four hundred year old birch bark canoe; tools from every period of Indian history; an antique skin drying stand, and many other historic artifacts that have been collected through the years in various ways.

It is said that wampum, sewing tools and many artifacts have been found during the construction of new homes in the Southampton area and have been given to the Reservation or kept as collector's items by new homeowners.

A Long Island small black bear, a fox, and a deer, supplied by a taxidermist, represent the wildlife that was so plentiful on Long Island at a time when majestic ancient trees dwarfed their surroundings. Portraits of historic figures emerge from the center parts of treated skins. Every memento of an indigenous past is being assembled by the descendants of the first Americans to make this living museum a continuously growing cultural center.

A gift shop whose proceeds will help to fund museum operations has yet to be created just to the right of the main entrance, opposite a stained glass logo of a native couple that looms high on the back wall

The woman in the logo is wearing a turkey feather cape, a traditional garment whose feathers are woven into an intricate backing. Some natives believe that wild turkey feathers portend auspicious undertakings.

At the bottom of the stairs on the lower level a photograph gallery is being prepared for the showing of historic pictures that have been donated by Shinnecock families.

An archives room for videos and recordings of verbal history is also located on the lower level, where participants will be introduced to ancient indigenous cultures through educational workshops.

A kitchen facility where traditional foods will be prepared for special events and festivities is also under construction on the lower level, along with offices and a storage area.

An amphitheater will open out from the back of the lower level as a setting for spiritual ceremonies, festivals, lectures, traditional dancing, demonstrations, drumming, flute and vocal concerts.

Further into the woods a reconstructed authentic Indian village complete with carved log canoes, thatched roof houses known as Wickiups, and wigwams for traditional storytelling is in the making. Shinnecock natives wearing their own traditional attire will represent their ancestors, using the tools, utensils and employing the skills and traditions of past times.

Funding for the Cultural Center and Museum began during the early 90's with a three-year grant from the Federal Government, which provided for the research for the project. A grant of $200,000 from the Mashantucket Pequot tribe in Connecticut broke the ground for the construction of the building, which cost $300,000. The Shinnecock tribe raised an additional $100,000 themselves and received donations of all kinds, including the museum's magnificent hand-carved door, oak flooring, display cases for artifacts, gift shop handicrafts, and labor.

On June 16, 2001 from 10 AM to 5 PM a festival called A Walk with the People will be celebrating the official opening of the first and only Native American owned and operated cultural center and museum on Long Island. The Shinnecock Nation and other Tribal guests will hold spiritual ceremonies and a private dedication on June 2, 2001.

"We hope to get a grant to keep the museum going for the next three years," Winonah Warren said while participating in Mr. Martine's guided tour of the murals. "David is going to be our tutorial consultant and advisor to the Board, but at some point David won't always be here when we have groups and tours and he's going to have to train someone to tell them everything he's telling you now. Our goal is to become self-sustaining. Schools are already calling us to make appointments for guided tours."

Shinnecock's "living museum" represents the traditional style of the East Coast Indian Long House on the West Gate Road of the Reservation on Montauk Highway across from Southampton College. It will be open by appointment for lectures and tours until additional funding makes it possible to establish daily hours. The cost of admission has not yet been determined, and will probably be approximately $5. For scheduling and information, please call: (631) 287-4923.

"Sharing our stories in this setting will help preserve our history and provide the opportunity to share our culture and history with everybody," Museum vice-president, Betty Cromwell, stated. "Before we can open our doors we still need approximately $70,000 in order to complete our building's interior. We need interior doors, flooring, lighting, sheet-rock, rest-room facilities and our building must be handicapped accessible." •

"Ridiculous"

So Says Southampton Attorney As Evidence-less Trial In Tortola Continues

By Jerry Cimisi

"In all my twenty-eight years as an attorney I have been involved in hundreds of trials, I've moderated about fifty on Court TV, and I have never seen a trial as ridiculous, as ludicrous as this one."

In a recent phone interview with Southampton attorney Michael Griffith, he scornfully described the progress of the murder trial in Tortola, a British protectorate, which has garnered international attention. Four vacationing Americans, one of them from Southampton, are on trial for the murder of another American, Lois McMillen, in January, 2000.

Griffith went on, "Every prosecution witness is like a defense witness. They say nothing. The defense attorneys are calling this the 'What Are We Doing Here For Three Weeks Trial.' You know what I call it? 'The Tortolan Counsel's New Clothes.' You remember the story of 'the Emperor's New Clothes' but he was really naked?"

Michael Griffith is the legal advisor to Barbara Labrador, the mother of William Labrador, one of the defendants. Labrador, along with Alex Benedetto, Evan George and Michael Spicer have been held without bail since January of last year for the murder of artist Lois Livingston McMillen, of Connecticut. The four men had known McMillen, and in 1997, Benedetto had dated her for about three months, but aside from this, thus far there appears to be no link between McMillen's murder (the government contends she was forcibly drowned) holding her underwater with his foot on her neck.

Plante made a deposition with the police last July, and had the charges he was serving under dismissed. Last week he testified for two days at the trial.

"I'll tell you what this is about," said Griffith. "Plante is counting on Labrador doing Plante's time."

Jeffrey Plante, 59, is a life-time con-man who has served in various prisons, recently violated his parole in Texas and was serving time in Tortola for passing bad checks and using his new wife's credit cards without her permission when he says Labrador confessed the murder.

"If the jury believes Plante, Labrador goes to jail; if the jury doesn't, Plante goes to jail and then probably gets extradited to Texas, where the termination date of his sentence is 2038," Griffith said.

Plante, who, on the island, is being called the "Snitch of Tortola," was the recipient of a previous jailhouse confession, in Hawaii in 1995.

Griffith related that Paul Dennis, Benedetto's and the four men – save for the testimony of one Jeffrey Plante, who made the acquaintance of the defendants in Her Majesty's Prison in Tortola last year.

For a period Plante shared a cell with Labrador, and in May, 2000, he reported to the authorities that one day the month previous, Labrador had confessed that he had murdered McMillen by attorney, when Plante was on the stand asked him, "Do you happen to be a priest in your spare time?" When Plante said No, Dennis then said well, people seem to confess to you.

In the 1995 confession, Plante gave his testimony in court; that trial resulted in a hung jury. At a second trial, in which Plante did not testify, the defendant in question was found guilty.

But in this case Plante's credibility has been strained not only because of his past crimes — he had been violating his parole in Texas when first arrested in Tortola — but his more recent wrongdoings have made him look not only suspicious but ridiculous.

Griffith said, "After getting out of jail he passes thirty bad checks." And so, at the end of last year,

Plante found himself once more in jail in Tortola. Griffith added, "I've been to a lot of places on the island, and he has stiffed a lot of businesses like this."

When Plante was on the witness stand, one of the defense attorneys asked him if he had ever been a prisoner of war and if he had ever been in the military. Plante said he had not. "Then," said Griffith, "he gets presented with a letter he had written to a judge in Dallas who had given him seven years, a handwritten letter that Plante had signed, saying that he had been in Vietnam, had won several medals and had been a prisoner of war for sixteen months. So Plante has just a moment ago said none of this could be true. So what does he do? He says that he didn't write the letter, that someone who was trying to do him a favor must have done it. This guy gets the Academy Award of snitches. I am amazed the government put him on the stand."

Plante has been married ten times, though he told the court that six of the ten marriages were for business reasons only. "I never even kissed those people," Plante told the court.

One woman, a Parisian, Karina Schwarze, had her own brush with Plante's free-wheeling ways. Schwarze had met Plante through an Internet site and said that she knew nothing of the McMillen murder case or Plante's role in it when she visited him on Tortola in December of last year.

At the time Plante was living in an apartment provided by the government. "You're not going to believe what this guy did," said Griffith. "He tells her he has a private jet waiting to take her to Tortola. When she says she can't get away at the time when Plante says the plane has to leave, he sends her a prepaid ticket — paid for with a check that bounces."

Schwarze claimed that in e-mails Plante said he owned homes as well as the private jet. Plante wine and dined her in Tortola, proposed marriage and she accepted. The marriage was planned for Valentine's Day.

But soon, Plante convinced Schwarze to let him use her credit cards, claiming he had canceled his own cards because of problems with his ex-wife. Eventually Plante gave Schwarze a check to cover the credit cards, but she said the check did not clear. Fed up, Schwarze returned to Paris. A few days later Plante was arrested for passing thirty-two bad checks while being a guest of the government.

"On Friday [April 20]" Griffith said, "a geologist testified for the government on the analysis of the sand found in Spicer's sneakers and Labrador's. McMillen was found on the West End of the island. The sand in Labrador's sneakers did not come from the West End. And the geologist said that only fifteen percent of the sand in Spicer's sneakers came from the West End, though he could not say exactly where on the West End; it's a beach miles long. And of course he could not say when the sand got into the sneakers. This is a beach island. They are going to have to build a lot of prisons if they are going to arrest people with wet sandy sneakers."

Griffith was alluding to the fact that Chief Inspector Jacob George said the men were arrested because they knew McMillen, had been seen with her two days before her death, and wet, sandy sneakers had been found in the house where the men were staying (the home of defendant Michael Spicer's parents). The sandy sneakers belonged to Labrador and Spicer.

"And" added Griffith, "George said he arrested the other two because — get this — they lived in the house. That's like in New York, the police pull a car over, there are four guys in the car and the police find a marijuana cigarette but nobody fesses up so they all get arrested. But in this case there's no marijuana cigarette."

The trial, originally expected to last two weeks, is now beginning its fourth. On Monday, April 23, before the prosecution rested, jurors visited sites on the island associated with the case, such as Jolly Roger's Inn where McMillen was last seen alive.

"The truth is that many women desperately want to use their lives and their talents in gainful, public capacities but encounter tremendous MindBlocks and RoadBlocks along the way," explains Marcia Rosen. "There are increasing numbers of women who are able to get beyond them and become successful in however it is that they define success in their lives. But successful women often find it difficult to have the peace, security, and connection they want and deserve. I say it all of the time, that women are one stressed out segment of society."

Marcia is talking about what women haven't found the words to describe yet, but which is at the heart and soul of what business and professional women are feeling and thinking and encountering today. Her ideas, which some may consider courageous and radical, account for her own success as the nationally known "Woman's Business Therapist," a title bestowed on her because of her insightful, humorous style of counseling business and professional women that often involved not only business-related issues, but more personal issues.

Her book, The Woman's Business Therapist: Eliminate the MindBlocks and RoadBlocks to Success, published by Chandler House Press in 2000 and available at major booksellers such as Barnes and Noble and amazon.com, has set in motion a whirling schedule of public speaking engagements across the country and a flurry of media coverage in the New York Times, Chicago Tribune, Los Angeles Times, Business Week Online, Working Mother, and Working Woman Magazine, among others. Recently it was announced that her book is on amazon.com's top 100 Women in Business best seller-list.

"When a woman goes into a business or professional career, she encounters issues that she wouldn't encounter if she were a man. Traditional social values, for example, you know the expectation on women that, sure they can go out and make money and make things happen professionally, as long as the children, the home, the husband, the family and friends, and everything else is taken care of, too, is really overwhelming and exhausting. Or when a woman could potentially make more money than their husbands or their fathers, or that making a lot of money somehow might diminish the men in their lives, these are really hard concepts for many women and the men in their lives. Secretly, these deeply held beliefs can present obstacles her to success. Women often wonder if they should have their heads examined for doing what seems to go against the stream."

Marcia's book describes other MindBlocks and RoadBlocks that women are apt to encounter, and she offers practical and proven suggestions for getting beyond them and becoming successful. For example, money is often a big problem. Women typically don't have money of their own starting out, and women are at a disadvantage in getting financing through traditional means. Negotiating the right relationships with spouses, family, friends and business associates that allows them the support, time and resources they need to become successful often requires extra creativity, personal skills, patience and tenacity, Marcia explains.

What do business and professional women really want? "Well, the details are different for each woman..."

Women are also prone to wishful thinking, negative thinking, bad habits, and what Marcia terms the "Orgasm Syndrome," which she is becoming positively famous for. Marcia believes the Orgasm Syndrome is a common and major obstacle for women. She says they shouldn't have to "fake it" anywhere, not in the boardroom, their office, or their business. She says women don't serve themselves or anyone else well by being less than they are capable of being. "Women tend to say something is okay when it really isn't, go along when they really don't want to, give over their authority when it really belongs to them, pretend they aren't as smart as they are so they don't threaten anyone, and so on," said Marcia. "It's behavior that will never result in the kind of success, comfort and satisfaction that women really want."

As the Woman's Business Therapist, Marcia Rosen counsels women individually or in groups to uncover the truths behind what's really keeping them from the success and happiness they want and then devising practical solutions that work in the whole of a woman's life. Working with women in this way for over two decades has yielded some common threads. "When I hear a woman say to me that she is exhausted and overwhelmed, that she's not sure if she wants to continue on her success path and is debating whether it's all worth it, then I really have to ask her to tell me what's really going on. More often than not, it's an issue that she doesn't have adequate support at home or at work. It may be that she has a lifestyle where she is second to everyone else's needs. It may be an issue that she is not getting paid enough or can't get enough financing. She's concerned about how success can cause her to feel disconnected to some of her relationships, especially those who don't support or encourage her, adding to her feelings of aloneness and isolation. These are often the real issues; it really isn't that she needs a vacation or a nap. She needs encouragement and help on these very heavy quasi-personal, quasi-professional issues, although a little R&R would do her some good, too!"

What do business and professional women really want? "Well, the details are different for each woman, but in general, they want to be taken seriously and treated respectfully, they want a higher standard of living, meaningful connection with people, personal security, greater joy and fulfillment, and financial, spiritual and emotional peace. Is that asking too much?" asks Marcia with a laugh.

"Well, the situations we women find ourselves in sometimes and the things we encounter are so absurd that we just have to look at it and laugh! I have a passion for helping business and professional women survive and thrive. I want to help women enjoy the journey of success more than they have in the past. Believe me, we earn it and deserve it." Marcia exclaims. "When you're an intelligent, competent woman and you go into a meeting and we are not treated as accomplished, professional equals, it's absurd! How is it that women can come home from a full day's work and still assume all of the home expectations and demands, too? Okay, and how are we going to straighten all of this out? As a business therapist and as a successful woman business owner myself, I've heard it all and I've experienced

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

OBSERVATIONS OF AN ISLANDER # 152 NEW DIRT FROM ALL OVER

So much is going on Island this week, I hardly know where to begin. My kids and I drove all over the Island Sunday seeing what's new.

We are all watching the rapid erection of the building next to Geo-Jo Video. It's like a soap opera in wood. You drive by every day and a little more is done. I see curved archways now where the doors will be. Route 114 is becoming a strip mall of sorts. I still haven't heard anything from Rumor Central about what these stores will be, but, whatever they are, I garn-tee they'll be open in time for tourist season, which seems to be starting very early this year.

The location of the new mini-mall is going to really increase town traffic. Which means more thru traffic will avoid the business district and zoom down the already dangerous St Mary's Road. I wonder how many hit and runs we'll have there this year. Maybe a few kids will get hurt seriously enough to warrant some more Stop signs and a lower speed limit. If I had a nickel for every vehicle I've seen blow the Stop sign on Manwaring and haul ass down St Mary's, I'd have enough for a house here.

And speaking of Manwaring, that's the new location of Sea-Breeze nursery in case you wondered where it went. And the house on Manwaring that has been lifted to build a second story where the first story was, is going very well.

I think we're going to have the most people ever here this summer. There is new dirt everywhere. I counted eleven houses in various states of construction on Midway alone. Two new houses are being built on Tuthill Drive, maybe three. In general Ram Island is building all over. Several oldtimers have assured me that the summer people on Shelter Island vastly outnumber the locals more than ever.

The Paard-on Me (but do you have any Grey Poupon?) Horse Farm is building two huge stables. I'll bet they could house 40 horses or 6 families in just one of those buildings. I've gotten used to the long white fence there, it's beginning to look appropriately rustic to me. But does it have to be white? I love fuschia. How about a fuschia fence? Horses with gold lame saddles? Ah, c'mon...

I don't know if it's a hawk or a falcon family that's occupying the third osprey nest on Ram Island Drive. I'll have to call Tom Damiani and get him to tell me, he doesn't have to see the bird, just listen to it. He's the Birdman of Shelter Island. I have listened to his Birdworks CD about 70 times and I can now identify my Northern Flicker from my Tufted Titmouse. And you thought I was just another pretty face, hey, all this and a birdbrain the pardon of her ex-husband Marc Rich. Should be interesting. Rumor is that she did not want to help at first, then got talked into it. Rumor has it a book deal is in the making. # DAN'S NEW YORK

By Dan Rattiner

So I get off the Hampton Jitney in Manhattan onto the sidewalk and the first thing I see is a big sign that reads DESIGNER JEWELRY, $5. It's in magic marker on white cardboard at the back of a table piled high with white boxes. Behind it, watching the traffic go by there on Third Avenue is a the street vender, a black man most likely African rather than African-American.

That's one of the things I like about Manhattan. A man from Nigeria with a plastic licence on a chain around his neck signed by Mayor Guiliani. Designer Jewelry, $5. How can I resist? I think of Cathie and the rule that everything you buy for your woman is one point. It could be a Lear Jet or it could be designer jewelry. Each gets a point. I spring for a bracelet.

"Have a nice day," the man says.

It is a nice day. In fact it's a beautiful day. Shafts of sunlight are separating sixty story skyscrapers, filtering light down on the avenue. On the street now is a man with earphones and a turban, pedalling a bicycle rapidly uptown. He swerves past a man in a white uniform lounging against a black limousine enjoying a smoke. Slung over the shoulder of the bike rider, there is a shiny red plastic pouch with what looks like rolled up architects plans sticking out. A woman walks by with eleven dogs trotting obediently on leashes.

A homeless man, selling newspapers, tries to sell one to her.

"Help the homeless," he says. "It's only a dollar." She hesitates, but it's too long a stretch for any meaningful transaction across all the dogs. She moves on, tails elevated and wagging happily all around her.

There really needs to be something said about street peddlers. This one, with a thick mane of white hair, sees me ten feet away watching this sea of wagging tails disappearing into the crowd. I'm thinking Georgia Pond and cattails.

"The homeless are there in an emergency," he says. "Say somebody has a heart attack and falls down here on the ground." He points. "Who is going to help them? Your friends, the homeless, that's who."

I give him a dollar bill. He gives me a newspaper and a blessing from God.

I walk up to Lexington and 40th, where there's street vendor hustling hot dogs from a stand with a big red and yellow umbrella over it. Here's the hustle. I ask him for a hot dog and he stabs a thick one amidst the thinner ones. This is a sausage not a hot dog. I know what's coming. He puts it in a roll, slōshes mustard on it and holds it out for you. Hot dogs are a dollar. Sausages are two dollars. I hold out a dollar.

"Two dollars," he says. He's already put it together. Why fight it?

I walk up Lex to Bloomingdale's where there's another vendor table. On it there are children's books, atlases, dictionaries, wallets, leather passport cases with the Seal of the United States on it. I pick up a zippered case which, inside, contains a mirror, rouge, scissors, comb, scissors, nail cutter, file, nail clipper, cuticle nipper and lipstick brushes. The cuticle nipper is worth fifteen dollars alone. I hold up the case.

"Five dollars," the Hispanic man says. Another point. How can you beat it?

Fifty feet down the sidewalk heading west on 58th Street here there is somebody with a chrome clothes rack filled with jackets and raincoats. DESIGNER SPORTS JACKETS $20, RAINCOATS $10 the sign says. There's another table with a man selling pocket books, 2 for $20. Where do they find this stuff?

And there's another guy with a table and a glass jar.

"Help the homeless," he chants. "All we want is one penny for the homeless. Just one of your pennies, small change, for the homeless. That's all."

Nobody's giving this man pennies to put in the jar for the homeless. They're all walking by with their hands in their pockets. What's a penny? Something funny here.

I love New York.

Suffolk Sheriff And Aide Plead Guilty

Suffolk County Sheriff Patrick Mahoney, who recently ran for county executive, and who has repeatedly said that Suffolk DA William Catterson had a political vendetta against him, for the moment left off all protestations of innocence, and, along with former aide, Undersheriff Edward Morris, pled guilty to charges of running Mahoney election campaign with country resources.

The guilty pleas came in the midst of a trial in New York State Supreme Court in Islip.

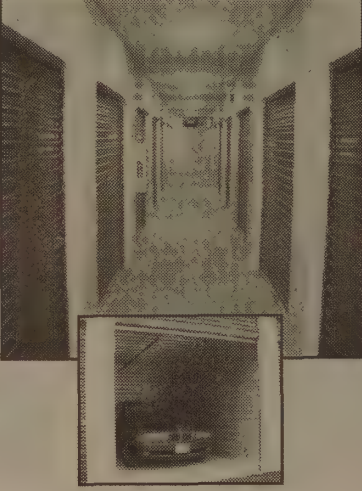

But the guilty pleas would not bring either men any jail time. Mahoney pled guilty to three misdemeanors and was fined $3,000 and must make $18,000 in restitution.

Morris pled guilty to one felony and a four misdemeanors. He was given a fine of $10,000 and sentenced to 1,000 hours community service.

Mahoney said he felt he had done wrong, but had accepted the plea bargain in order to end a long legal battle. Had Mahoney been found guilty of the charges as they had stood at the beginning of the trial, he would have faced not only the loss of his position, but jail time. As it stands, he will continue as Suffolk County Sheriff.

He is up for re-election this fall. When asked if he would run, he would not commit himself.

With the trial ended in midstream, jurors said that with what they had heard so far, they would have convicted Morris, but were as yet undecided about Mahoney.

much of it myself. I've been doing this since the 1960s."

In the 1960's, when only 4% of all small businesses were owned by women, Marcia started her own day care program. Only 19 children enrolled when she started the business, when she sold the business for a significant profit, it had grown to two schools and over 200 children.

Marcia then pursued her real passion: communications and writing. She was a writer/editor for several years, became head of public relations for a major ABC affiliate, and finally gave in once and for all to her entrepreneurial spirit and started Rosen & Associates, a marketing/public relations agency in the Southwest. Her business grew, and before selling it, again for a significant profit, it had grown to the second largest agency in the state. She relocated to New York City and ultimately to Westhampton, New York to continue her business consulting and writing. With long-time East End resident David Lee, Marcia established the East End Partnership, an East End marketing and PR firm.

Marcia's own experiences as a girl coming of age in a traditional home of the 50s, a young woman consumed with ambition and passion in the 1960s, and a fully grown woman of the revolutionary 70s, resulted in Marcia Rosen, women's advocate, leader and successful businesswoman of the 80s, 90s, and into the Millennium. "I truly never understood or could accept from an early age why any woman should be denied the right to fulfill her dreams and ambitions whatever they might be, it never made sense to me and still doesn't. That may be part of what fuels my passion about women's success. I have always said, inspired by Virginia Wolf, that a woman has to have money of her own, not just a room."

Marcia served as an advisor and trainer in business programs for the American Women's Economic Development Corporation and the Business Outreach Centers. She was one of the founding members of the New York Women's Agenda, the Venture Fund and NYC Task Force for Women in addition to sitting on several other women's organization boards. In recognition of Women's Empowerment Day, 1994, Marcia was recognized by the City of New York's Comptroller's office alongside Betty Friedan for "helping thousands of women advance their careers and succeed in starting in their own companies." She was honored as a Woman of Distinction by New York State Senator Kenneth LaValle's office in 1999. She was instrumental in establishing the new East End women's organization, Sandcastles of the Hamptons...Fund for Women.

Marcia will also be honored at a gala awards dinner here on the East End on Wednesday, April 25 at Atlantica, Westhampton Beach. Marcia has been named the 2001 Woman of the Year by the East End Women's Network for her dedication to women and her tireless efforts for East End women and community organizations. Marcia, along with Rose Mancusi, formed what Len Conway, President of the Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center (WHBPAC), called "the PR Dream Team" in helping to promote the new and now very successful theatre. Marcia is a member of the WHBPAC board of directors. Marcia was a board member of the Eastern Long Island Business Executives Roundtable, helped promote the Greater Westhampton Beach Partnership Committee, and is presently co-chair of the Author Reading Series at the Hampton Synagogue.

In addition to speaking engagements, business therapy, and business consulting, Marcia is working on a second book. She splits her time between greater Westhampton and New York City. She has two grown sons, three grandchildren, and one goddaughter.

A favorite Hamptonite Cliff Robertson hasn't been around lately. He's been busy reading the comics...well okay, acting in the comics. The very popular Tobey Maguire will be starring in the film Spiderman. Cliff is appearing as his Uncle Ben. We look forward to this one.

Steve Madden, a summer Hamptonite, has a cool ad campaign in newspapers lately. His hip shoe designs are now being worn by a very hip cyber girl, she's a cross between the real and unreal...a "real" ly wild look.

David and Sybil Yurman sponsored a "Digital Art" party at the Whitney. This was an act of love as both Yurman's are artists foremost. They featured their "Pink Passion Ice" baubles on the evening's committee.

We are happy to hear that J. Tortorella Swimming Pools of Southampton has been honored as one of the top pool builders in the United States. Congratulations.

East Hampton's Donna McCue, author of Your Fate Is In Your Hands, will be appearing on NBC, Friday, April 27, 12 noon. The show Men Are From Mars, Women Are From Venus has asked her back for the second time to do her intuitive magic. There is talk in Hollywood about Donna having her own show. Good luck to our East End Psychic.

Congratulation to Golden Fists of Fury, the popular funk/rock band from Greenport that makes its debut at Amagansett's Stephen Talkhouse, Saturday, May 5, 10:30 p.m. (after J. Geils and Magic Dick). The group has also released its first CD.

Sheltered

I love birds and it's so nice to identify them by their calls. I also enjoy catcalls, but I forgot what they sound like.

The big debate about how to abate the now infamous summertime North Ferry Line rages on. The ferry line is such a tourist event, it has its own Tee-Shirts and bumper stickers now that say "I Survived the Shelter Island Ferry Line." Cool. Everyone is honestly trying hard to find the right solution. A bigger ferry? Another small ferry? How about we expand on Cliff Clark's excellent idea about a ferry from Greenport AROUND Shelter Island to Sag Harbor. A lot of traffic, especially commercial trucks, are just passing through. I hear people already talking about that dreaded wait.

As I have said before, there is "on-line" such as via America On Line, Earthlink, Optimum and such and then there's SOL, ShelterIsland On Line. When you're online for the North Ferry in summer, you're considered to be SOL. Your only options are to A) go nuts and yell at the Ferry guys - not recommended. B) To quote a Marine axiom,

"Adapt and Overcome."

Here's what you need to handle the ferry line like a local; water, snacks, CDs, reading material - one of Dan Moran's poetry books is mandatory in every Island car expressly for this purpose. You may also have a few Readers Digests. I commonly read magazines and do my bills in the line, or my nails or my make-up, or change my clothes, wash my hair, shave my legs, you can accomplish pretty much anything when you're SOL. I believe SOL is where Dan composes his poetry, where Dennis Rafflelock composes his music, where Olive Reich and Janet Cuthbertson sketch, to mention but a few of our great artists in residence. No doubt that great thoughts is thought in that line by them what thinks their thoughts is great.

I myself have written columns on the backs of envelopes in while SOL, and if I run out of paper, I went to the next cars and asked for discarded envelopes from their backseats. I use SOL to rearrange my dashboard shell collection and I've drawn a deck of cards on the backs of old ferry tickets so mother and I can drink gin, I mean play gin, while we wait. Sometimes I clean out the car, collect all the garbage and brush out all the damp clumpy old sand. I usually have enough time to walk to the beach for a bucket of fresh sand and shake it out evenly in the car before the line moves. Being SOL challenges your creativity.

Yup, it's gonna be a banner year...

Fortunately, Buzz's friends talked him out of his original design for his new dealership.

No one ever accused Buzz Chew of lacking unique ideas.

So Buzz's family, staff, builder and architects were ready when planning began on his new Chevrolet-Oldsmobile-Cadillac building in Southampton. Buzz showed up at the first meeting bristling with concepts and creativity. He'd even done a few sketches in chalk on the back of an old mud flap.

Among the inspirations Buzz cited were the Taj Mahal, Buckingham Palace and Graceland. Someone suggested that Buzz was spending too much time in Vegas.

We're happy to report that reason prevailed. The new Buzz Chew building is flat-out gorgeous, truly a state-of-the-art dealership. Even better, it's designed to be efficient and customer-friendly in dozens of innovative ways you'll find no where else on Long Island. Because in the end, Buzz didn't just build this new facility for himself. He did it for you.

Stop by and see for yourself.

...Focus on the North Fork

Adopt-A-Beach

By Susan Simm

There is a flowering plant that has migrated into the sea. It needs no showy flowers to attract insects or animals: it simply releases pollen into the water where it remains in suspension for days, spread by currents. Just beyond our shoreline, underwater "meadows" catch the sun and wave to and fro with the sea's constant motion. Turbulence is calmed as the green fronds soften the impact of waves. This is the life of eelgrass.

Misunderstood until the 1980s when much of our eelgrass was lost on the East End as a result of the brown tide, we now appreciate the importance of this aquatic plant. Schools of juvenile fish find shelter within its depths. Shellfish use it as nourishment and nursery. And while it provides the main diet for Canada geese and brant, less than 5% of it is eaten by direct grazers. Its main function is the production of "detritus" - a fancy name for decaying plant matter - that is extremely important to the health of our ecosystems because it forms the base of a food web upon which many sea creatures depend, whether directly or indirectly. It also helps to improve water quality and prevent erosion. Eelgrass grows in estuaries, bays, lagoons and other shallow marine environments where water is clear and light is plentiful. Usually found growing a few feet under water, it can even be found at depths of up to 100 feet if the water is unusually clear.

But these beautiful underwater meadows are in danger. Shoreline construction can alter the absorption of wave energy and erode the bottom while increasing turbidity, and structures built over the water prevent eelgrass from getting enough light to grow. Dredging is one of the greatest threats to eelgrass. Not only are entire plants removed, but the entire biological and chemical structure of the ecosystem is changed. As eelgrass is removed or dies, erosion and silt accumulation increase.

Wetland Specialist Chris Pickerell of the Cornell Cooperative Extension Marine Program is looking for volunteers: beachcombers and waterfront homeowners on the bay are needed to monitor for the presence of floating and stranded live eelgrass shoots. Volunteers will be asked to keep a logbook of location, time, date and amount of eelgrass observed along "their" beach.

"The more frequent the observations, the more useful the data will be," said Chris, who manages Cornell's eelgrass activities, including long-term monitoring of beds and an eelgrass nursery and restoration program. Cornell

GOLFING

By Don Sherry

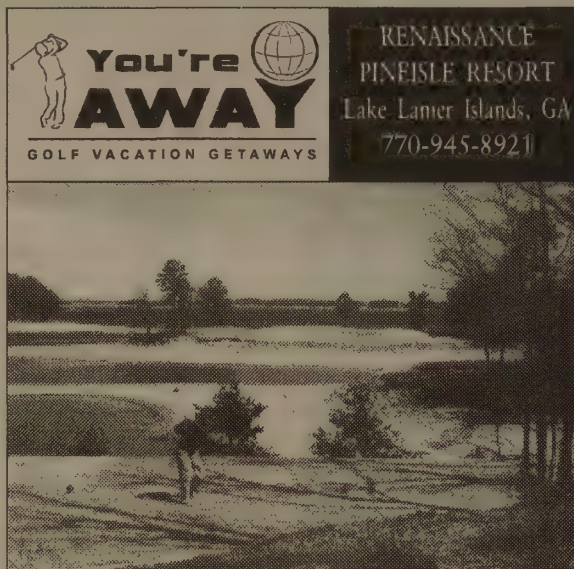

When Atlanta vacationers get out of town for lively weekends with their golf clubs, boats and dancing shoes, there is a good chance they'll end up at the Renaissance Pineisle Resort on the shores of Lake Lanier 45 miles northeast of the city.

The damming of the Chattahoochee River created this 38,000-acre resort and recreation complex. The region as a whole has also benefited as a once serious flooding problem downstream is now under control and Atlanta's drinking water supplies are safely accounted for. The dam also enables a small amount of energy to be produced, particularly during peak use times.

With 540 miles of shoreline, it seems strange that rolling farmland once occupied this spot. Proof is available, though. Buildings, trees and other structures are sitting deep under Lake Lanier's surface for any Atlantans curious enough to go looking for their Atlantis.

Heading out from the city it became obvious pretty quickly that the main interest in this area is boating. The marinas and boating stores were numerous. The size of the boats, in fact, rival those we see in the seaside marinas of the Hamptons and Montauk. There were many houseboats, indicating that people stay out on the lake for weeks at a time, docking and camping along the picturesque shoreline.

The accommodations at the resort were spacious, comfortable and offered breathtaking views of the lake. As the sun came up over the golf course the next morning, we were eager to get moving on to a course which has hosted a number of LPGA events, including the Nestle World Championship.

It is easy to see why the women's tour stops here. The course is very challenging, featuring uphill holes, downhill and a variety of doglegs and par 3s that share one thing in common — they're all picture postcards. On a good many holes you must hit straight, or you'll end up in the trees.

The par-3 15th from the back tees is 250 yards, almost all carry. Just for fun, I hit a shot to see how close to the green I could splash it in. After making good contact and enjoying a brief hopeful moment, the splash 40-50 yards from the other side quickly reminded me I was playing the whites on this day.

The No. 1 handicap is the par-5 ninth, a 544-yard bender that required three good shots to get home.

The greens were very much like good Long Island summer greens. They putted true with some undulation. But the true eye-catcher here is the routing of the fairways. I found myself frequently turning around on my way to the green to glimpse the view back to the tees.

Our trip in early March showed Pineisle Resort in its off-season. The azaleas were yet to bloom and the trees were bare. Still it was obvious what a gem we were playing. I would like to return with my regular foursome in the summer months. I think we would enjoy the course for four or five consecutive rounds. From our brief experience here, I'm sure we'd also greatly enjoy the dining and nightlife.

Strong Showing For Area Links In Golf Digest Top 100

Golf Digest has just published its annual rankings of the top 100 golf courses in the country, and East End layouts captured five of the spots.

Shinnecock Hills slipped a notch from fifth to sixth in the overall rankings, but neighboring National Golf Links moved from 17th to 16th. Maidstone placed 42nd, down from 38th, while Atlantic managed to just make the cut at No. 100, dropping 21 spots.

But the big surprise on the list was the re-emergence of Southold's pride and glory, Fishers Island Club, at No. 44. Not for decades has it made the list. Most staggering of all was its rating for aesthetic value. A panel of 800 experts, who have all been around the golf block a time or two, voted the club third in the nation in this category, behind only Pebble Beach and Cypress Point and ahead of Augusta National(!).

Golf Digest's rating system employs a weighted average covering these categories: Shot values, resistance to scoring, design variety, memorability, aesthetics and conditioning.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Most car enthusiasts have never heard of a Hacker Craft, Gar Wood, Hinckley, Supermarine or Mosquito. Why? Because these unique names belong to wooden boats and airplanes. The Hacker, Gar Wood and Hinckley were the creme de la creme of wooden boats originally built in the '20s and '30s. Surprisingly, Supermarine was a British airplane (aeroplane?) company that built some of the fastest wood aircraft used by the allied forces in WWII.

Good products never die, and Hacker Craft and Hinckley still build "wood" boats. Their appeal is that they are absolute works of art. Quality is expensive. For example, Hinckley currently makes a thirty foot day cruiser called a "picnic boat," the price: $350,000. You know it has high quality and is the best of the best because Martha Stewart owns one!

The point of all this boat and airplane talk is that yes, indeed, wood is a viable and practical building product for use in automobiles. Properly used as decoration, it can also be beautiful.

The early cars of the '20s had metal frames but the body was usually mounted onto a wooden subframe. British sports cars like the MG-TD-to the 1955 TF series had their bodies mounted on wood. Same for the Morgan. The 1964 British Marcos sports car had its entire underbody, frame and all, made of glued marine plywood. Eventually the Marcos had a steel frame because, on the predominately wet roads of England, over time the wood frame would rot.

Wood has great insulating properties. For many years, even into the '60s, the floorboards of Jags, MGs and Austin Healeys were made of wood. I had a 1978 Saab 900EMS fastback, considered by many to be Saab's best model. I was surprised to see that the entire trunk area was covered by a heavy piece of fabric-covered wood, as was the back seat.

Besides high performance sports cars, my favorite collector cars have always been wooden station wagons. I was ahead of my time, because early on I had three of them, all at once. A '49 and '51 Ford Country Squire and a '47 Ford wagon. I say "ahead of my time" because then, all those cars cost around $1,000 each, and nobody really wanted them. They were all in really good shape. Today's market for Woodies is very active, and restored wooden station wagons sell for between $25,000 and $50,000. There were wood bodies also put on many different types of passenger cars. The most famous is the

'49 Chrysler Town and Country convertible and the '47 Ford Sportsman convertible. Because of their beautiful wood cladding, these cars are very unique, and worth thousands of dollars more than the all-metal cars of the period.

When talking about wood, please be aware that the wood on these cars were not flat pieces of timber, but wood that was curved around the shape of the car's body. The cars always had a heavy, light-wood bent frame, surrounding a darker wood background. In Ford's case, I know the woodwork was shipped out to a special lumber facility nearby the factory in Dearborn. As we know, in the '60s, the real wood trim on station wagons was replaced by phony-looking fiberglass battens juxtaposed over thick wood-grained contact paper. Trompe l'oeil of the worst order. An insult to the real wood station wagon!

Like they said in the film The Graduate, the future is plastic, and this is certainly true in the world of automobile manufacturing. This is perhaps the nostalgic appeal of the wooden boats and cars that we remember from the past. Wood is organic. It has life. It can be recycled back into nature.

It's refreshing to note that all of the fine cars of the world have real wood on their dashboards. Perhaps this touch of warmth is a small tribute to the "Woodies" of the past.

A car presently in production that would be the absolutely perfect donor car to be encapsulated with a wooden body is the new Chrysler PT Cruiser. Every time I see this unique and friendly shape, it's screaming to be a Woody. The Chrysler Corp. has more design sense than any company in Detroit, so I'm sure they must have discussed this possibility in corporate meetings. Please Chrysler, produce a new generation Woody. Maybe by some miracle of miracles, the wood trim will be real, and not plastic or fiberglass. The birds will sing, trees will sway with the breeze, the grass will be greener and the car world will be a better place.

Shop 'til You Drop...With Maria Tennariello

'Tis the season to be happy. It's finally spring! Let's do some spring shopping...and some cleaning.

I found a brand new shop that has just opened called HB Interiors located on Main Street in Bridgehampton. This shop is a full service fabric workroom: an Ateiler de Couture producing home furnishings that are more than investments, they are works of art. The workroom has now expanded to include a showroom offering an exclusive selection of high-end fabrics and other fine home furnishings in addition to HB's services. This shop is also a valuable resource for interior designers, architects and the general public. Stop in and see for yourself.

Pools and spas are popping up all over the Hamptons and the newest pool company that has just come to my attention is right here in Wainscott. Country

Home Pools, Spas & Sprinklers is having some spring specials (that will expire soon) on vinyl pool installations (from $12,500), so get going. They also do pool openings, maintenance and pool closings and for your convenience, full service packages. Give them a call at 537-8036.

The season opens early this year for Jean Sinnenberg Prestige Shows with their annual Hampton's Sagaponack Antiques Show and Sale that will be happening on Saturday, May 5 at 9 and 10 a.m., depending upon which tickets you are holding. It's a rain or shine event at the famous Old Stove Pub restaurant on Montauk Highway in Sagaponack. There will be prestigious antiques dealers from all over the country with wonderful furniture from France and England, garden antique furniture and architectural, decorative furnishings and accessories, lamps and lighting, fabrics and linens and much more. This show benefits East End Hospice.

Another new shop that has popped up is Joanna's Lifestyle on Division Street in Sag Harbor. This cute shop is packed to the rafters with eclectic and unique merchandise that will please everyone's taste, with more to come. Lots of hand-made soaps, lots of glassware, vases, pewter candelabras, planters that are imported from Belgium, lamps, faux mink-fur throws for your bedroom in four different colors, beach and garden type paintings called green-art that you can place your plants on and hang on the wall and much more...Call 725-6326.

Well, that's about it for this week. Until next week. Ciao and Happy Spring Shopping!

"wish list" of beaches includes almost the entire south shoreline of Southold Town, including beaches adjacent to Little Peconic Bay, Southold Bay, Orient Harbor, Hallock Bay/Narrow River and Gardiners Bay.

According to Cornell, although some meadows remain in several areas, much of what existed prior to the brown tide has never returned. Live eelgrass shoots are regularly dislodged from meadows as a result of wind-driven waves, boat landings, anchorage and shellfishing activities. Left alone, the material floats out to sea or ends up stranded on local beaches where it eventually dries up and dies.

An Eelgrass Meadow

"We plan to utilize what we call 'stranded robust shoots' for use in propagation and transplanting. However, before we can develop a system to collect and handle this material, we first have to be able to predict where and when it will be available," said Chris.

Mr. Pickerell and his staff are working on designing, constructing and staffing a first-of-its-kind eelgrass handling and culture facility at Cedar Beach in Southold. While construction will soon begin, data collection will allow Cornell to begin restoration work this summer. If you or a friend would like to 'adopt-a-beach,' please call Chris at 852-8660.

GO THE DISTANCE

By Gabriel Rattiner

Three makes one
And one makes another.
The crown of the ocean,
Calling us.
See the distance, feel the distance,
GO THE DISTANCE,
When one's soul is stronger than the heart, They will hear the voice,
When one man did,
A new voice Arrived,
Cries with sorrow,
But some did not hear
the cries,
So they kept on,
to go the distance.

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

"BEST OF THE BEST" AT VERED

What strikes this critic about the current show at East Hampton's Vered Gallery is the connection between the still and moving image: many of the exhibitors are, in fact, both artists/photographers and filmmakers.

Consider the case of painter Julian Schnabel, the most timely example, whose movie, Before Night Falls, is a critical hit. His purple plate painting at the Vered occupies center stage, its abstract form reminding one of a crescendoing wave, not entirely unlike Pat Steir's wave series. The work is delineated and dynamic, both literally and figuratively: the curves evoking movement that strains to forsake the canvas itself. Image and motion are Schnabel's tools of the trade as a cinematic artist, too.

Some exhibitors are photographers who also extend their aesthetics to include film. Consider photographer Eadward Muybridge who literally captured movement in his work. Hired by the governor of California to prove that a horse in full stride takes all four feet off the ground, Muybridge started the project with enthusiasm. (He was interrupted along the way when he was arrested for murdering his wife's lover; fortunately, he was acquitted due to temporary insanity.) Muybridge's sequential 1887 photos at the gallery, "Animal Locomotion," which feature a male athlete jumping, paved the way for Thomas Edison's Kinetoscope.

Man Ray's photographs on display have a connection to his avant-garde films of the 1920s: one photograph segments a female nude into two parts, fragmentation and disorientation very much a part of Ray's surreal movies. His use of the woman as an object is another principle which Ray follows with his manipulation of objects in the film,

Emak Bakia.

The photographer Weegee was a photojournalist whose images of New York's seedy side are well-known. (The examples at the Vered are not really seedy, however: a couple kissing in the movie theatre is one example.) What is not as well-known are his documentaries, again recording Manhattan life and the quirky people who inhabit it. There's a subtle theatricality about both his photographs and films – call it stylized realism.

Stylization also resides in Bert Stern's famous photographs of Marilyn Monroe also on display. Unlike Weegee, Stern does not evoke this same overt stylization in his documentary movie on the Newport, Rhode Island, jazz festival. Even so, there's an effective juxtaposition between the musicians and the varied people watching them which is just as revealing about human nature as is Weegee's documentaries. And as revealing as Stern's images of Marilyn Monroe.

The show at the Vered will be on view until the end of April.

"Andy Warhol" by Weegee

HONORING THE ARTIST: SIMON LEVENSON

What impresses a casual observer about painter Simon Levenson is his penchant for learning, his intellectual curiosity, his ability to gain knowledge from a variety of sources. In a word, his desire to grow. Which seems quite appropriate, being that Mr. Levenson currently paints still lifes abundant with growing things.

While Mr. Levenson's New York apartment sits smack in the middle of a neighborhood overflowing with architectural detail (including a building designed by Sanford White), we have the feeling that he sees the buildings as growing objects as well. Let's face it, he can't escape an attraction to things that flourish – even though they may take diverse forms.

Last summer it was the local landscape that Mr. Levenson captured with great attention: sunflower fields; vineyards; the Sagaponack dunes. Now he's focusing mostly on still lifes.

"I just picked up two boxes of junk from my mother's basement in the Hamptons," he explains with enthusiasm. "A tea pot, some lace that was my grandmother's. I'm doing a new piece using the lace. I just made a decision to concentrate on still lifes, and that's what I'm doing."

The idea of "growing" can also be applied to Mr. Levenson's professional development. "I learned a lot this winter," he explains. "My brother gave me a book about painting, and it opened up some sort of door about tone, light and dark, using color more selectively."

Mr. Levenson's family also allowed him to develop, providing a nurturing environment for him when he was younger. "My father painted during the last five years of his life, and he and mom were always supportive of my art," Mr. Levenson recalls.

As if to reinforce this notion, Mr. Levenson proceeds to read a brief portion from a book he is writing. "We were looking at Cezanne's work together, and my father said to me and my brother, 'You boys can be beautiful for what you are.' I'll always remember that."

Story telling doesn't always mean writing books, however. Mr. Levenson has been "dabbling with a story for a film during the last year." His art work, he says, has a lot of narrative potential, and if truth be told, he'd ultimately likely to make a movie. We have the impression that such a film is sure to include some life lessons he has learned along the way.

Currently, Mr. Levenson is putting a few life lessons to work. "Art is a series of independent marks; it's an honest mark. It has its own identity. My job at the moment is to be respectful of what I'm doing. Each mark has a cumulative effect that's very moving."

He continues, "The everyday thing that keeps me straight, however, is when I've finished my daily routine, did my exercises, set up my canvas, and sit down to paint. I say to myself, 'This is a terrific place to be.'"

MAYOR KOCH Goes To THE MOVIES

I went to see this film with four other people. Those four people liked it and the ratings that they gave it ranged from good to excellent. The fifth person did not like it at all, and that was me. For this review, that is the only vote that counts, hence the minus (-).

At the risk of being called a barbarian, worse still a philistine, let me warn you that I kept fighting off the urge to fall asleep throughout the almost two hour film.

The two actors who played the leading roles, John Turturro and Emily Watson, did a reasonably good job, some would say superb, in creating two characters who were preposterous to begin with.

The Luzhin Defense (-)

Alexander Luzhin is played by John Turturro. Luzhin is first shown as a youngster (Alexander Hunting), living in Russia. By the time Luzhin is about 10 years old, he is not only addicted to chess, but he is a prodigy. He is taught how to play chess by an evil mentor Valentinov (Stuart Wilson). Valentinov loses faith in Luzhin's ability to become a world champ, but he reappears when Luzhin vies for the world championship in northern Italy.

The match is held at a luxurious spa. Luzhin now appears as part absent minded professor and part shopping bag man. He immediately falls in love with a young ravishingly beautiful woman, Natalia (Emily Watson), who is staying at the spa. Natalia is patrician and there with her mother (Geraldine James) to find a suitable, wealthy man to marry.

How these two disparate characters become immediately attracted to one another defies belief. That is what falling in love is all about: defying, on occasion, all common sense and our five senses.

Luzhin has a nervous breakdown during the match because he is losing and needs to come up with a defense strategy. How he comes up with this strategy, the atmosphere in Italy during the 1930s with the occasional appearance of Mussolini's black shirts (never threateningly), and several flashbacks to Luzhin's youth, are what make up the balance of the film.

I was not enthralled by this film, and kept thinking about the son of my friends. Their son Tony is about ten years old and regularly wins trophies around the country. I wondered what his comments would be if his dad Howard and mom Jenny took him to see this film.

But I couldn't wait for those comments. Just as professional chess players are forced to race against the clock when playing a game, movie reviewers have to meet deadlines.

BELLYLAUGHS STUFFED INTO WORK-A-DAY-BULGE-CONTROL-PANTIES

Renee Zellweger. WHO? RENEE ZELLWEG ER! Try to say it three times... fast. Gee, that's pretty good... considering that Renee Swellznger... er, uh... Wellspringer? Ok, you know... or, maybe you don't, because she.. her.. that one who was in, Jerry Maguire and notably, Nurse Betty. . . is not exactly a household name. However, once (or twice... it's worth it) you've seen her in the Brit, strip-tease of the very human condition of a 32-year old bachelorette/ "verbally incontinent spinster," who is 20 or so pounds overweight and drinks, smokes and self-agonizes too much. . . well, when you've seen this most tender, funny, ultra, plus ultra romantic comedy, BRIDGET JONES'S DIARY, you will take Ms. Zoingfeller, oops! Mz. Z... right into your heart and home. As a matter of fact, after she has had such a jolly-good time in bed with Hugh Grant, you will want to cuddle into the rumpled bed clothes with her! Regardless of your age, gender or sexual persuasion. Mz. Z can beguile the brittle veneer off of even the most highly lacquered, staid and rigid bed posts.

A DIARY OF WAITS AND MEASURES

Miss Zigglerwerker. . . er, Renee, beat out many British stars for the role, so highly coveted because of the vastly popular articles written in diary form by Helen Fielding and later, a best selling book (1996) with a somewhat uneven sequel. Written with such stark comedic believability and carefree indifference. . . it's brisk, smart wit captivates everyone, dealing, as it does, with middle-class weaknesses and strengths. . . common and rare.

Bridget Jones's Diary

Not since Britain's 1966 hit, Georgy Girl, has there been such a charming, morality-of-the-times, vivid but happy story of "Ugly-duckling" facing life. The plump Miss then was Lynn Redgrave. . . and she's still Weight Watching. Bridget's Diary is less acidic and, this may bother some. But, I say . . . when you are riding a good strong wave and, you're deliriously exhilarated . . . go with it. Why worry about the end. In this case, the Third Act is a bit ditzzy but, it certainly isn't a washout. It's for those of us who want the slipper to fit . . . even if the foot is a little puffy. Especially, if it's swollen with active, tissue engorging hormones.

NOT PERFECT AND CLUELESS BUT TRYING

The pulsating Miss Zelanwanger ?? makes the most agonizing pain . . . loneliness . . . as raucously funny and uplifting as your favorite long shot horse winning the Derby. You can guess what she does with the funny stuff. Zegenwetter?? is a long-shot from Houston, Texas who does very well with the Gwyneth-out-of-the-mouth of Emma Thompson, long-A-diction, thank you. And, if she didn't . . . who the heck, cares. Cause, whether she's smoking too much or partying too much . . . or shaving her legs or ripping off a fuzzy hairline in the bikini thong area, we share the pain with knowing humor. And then, suddenly she is the object of the affection of 2 (count them . . . TWO) grandiosely attractive, eligible (pretty much) men.

HUGH GRANT: A SNAKE IN WOMEN'S KNICKERS

The men are: her boss at the Publishing House where she is a publicist. This is . . . an extremely amorous Hugh Grant, as Daniel. He notices her bare-to-the-crotch, mini-skirted legs and small bras whose cups runneth over but is unlike the constant run of old lechers who do the same and accompany it with a grope of her backside. Then, there is the very reserved, wealthy, accomplished lawyer, Darcy, played by Colin Firth. . . who was Darcy in the grand BBC Tele-series, Pride and Prejudice. Author Fielding tips her feathered cap to Jane Austen's very universal quill.

Both Darcy and Daniel love Bridget, "just the way she is." The author and the Director Sharon Maguire, too, are not above using Billy Joel's song to underscore it and more. They produce words and pictures that come at you with avalanche-like profusion and it all works. Slapstick, wisecracks, visual puns, broken crockery and promises and heart-break.

How is Bridget, "just the way she is"? She is klutzy and indomitable. She always says the wrong thing, because it's always the truth. She has the lowest estimate of her worth, but keeps trying to improve it. Hence, the diary. It's a record of gains and losses. The American actress who portrays her gained twenty pounds for the role. Remember her name, Renee Zangelweegal. You can't lose.

GODFODDER STILL ON LAWN GUYLAND?

A couple of years ago, good lookin' director Jonathan Demme took on one of the world's most horrendous subjects, Hannibal (the Cannibal) Lechter, and won best director Oscar and other Oscars for that awesome, terrifying epic. One of the reasons why was because, ultimately, Anthony Hopkins' grotesque Hannibal was . . . likeable. Three years before that he rounded up a bunch of talented, but casual suspects to make an extremely likeable mob movie, that entertaining farce, Married to The Mob. Way over the top and, most likely, under budget, he brought together comparative new-comer actors and a seasoned camera crew (the seasoning must have been basil and oregano). They were all stuffed into the trunk of a car and dumped out here on Long Island where Vito Coreleone raised his family . . . so nicely. The crew was right at home as was one yout'ful actor, Alec Baldwin (a smart alec even then). Then, there's Michelle Pfeiffer (I think you pronounce only two F's), the wonderful Joan Cusack and Mercedes Ruehl (she drives a Ford).

Married To The Mob

Out of the blue came one-time child star, Dean Stockwell (he was younger then). He was cast as Tony the Tiger, Russo, Mafia Capo! Alec Baldwin is Frank (the Cucumber) De Marco, he's Tony's top hit man. I won't tell you why he's called "Cucumber". Let's just say it kinda goes with the cannoli and broccoli rabe. Michelle, is Angie, the Cucumber's liddle wife (oye!). Their 8 year old son, Joey, plays 3 Card Monty after school, conning kids out of their lunch money. After work (icing Tony's choices du jour) Cucumber is fingering Tony's naked girlfriend Karen . . . played nudely by Nancy Travis. "Cuke" and Karen have made a big mistake. Tony has a highly jealous wife, Connie, done to a Boffolo turn by Ms. Ruehl and, don't think Tony takes this like a pussy cat. It could mean clawed cucumber sandwiches for Tea.

It's a kick (in the head) to see Baldwin with a partner both in dark, 3-button suits with white shirts and mild-mannered neckties, standing with a mob of commuters, waiting for a morning Long Island Railroad train. Mr. Baldwin looks perfectly at home. I guess he should, this could be his actual home town! But, as Frankie the Cucumber, the two take seats behind a big, fat bald man and when chugging through a tunnel, Frank pings a bullet into the back of the fat head. That's only the beginning of the movie.

Producer/Director Demme's aim to make an old fashioned screwball, madcap (in this case, mad capo) movie is right on target. From the opening, (not necessarily typical), L.I.R.R. commuter scene to a wild, brawling shoot-out at its sunny Miami conclusion... we follow Angie as she in turn is followed . . . nay, pursued by the mad capo, the FBI, New York Police . . . you name it. You see, Tony was so mad about Frankie schtumping his girlfriend, he rubbed him out. Then, the "Tiger" is mad about Angie. Angie wants out of the mob . . . out, out, OUT! She flees to a flea bag in the city to start a new life. She does. She gets a hairdressing job and a boyfriend! An FBI guy, Matthew Modine who's following her because they're sure Tony the Tiger will find her. Natch, she doesn't know the sweet FBI guy is an FBI guy. Tony and his mob find her and soon they all wind up in Miami at a Mafioso Convention. We're talkin' The mob, the F.B.I. and almost every other law agency and Tony's madder-then-hell wife . . . Connie! Can Angie divorce the MOB? An annulment? Anything? Well, there's always . . . BANG BANG!

This week's guest will be Elise Nevele, who painted Angie's N.Y. Flea Bag apartment. Honest. She's a "seasoned" Scenic Artist. I will be there (one of the guys out front). There will be refreshments . . . maybe garlicky greens. Call 537-0500 and Dan will reserve you a seat.

silvia lehrer's cooking column

Ina Garten has done it again. Since she gave us her acclaimed The Barefoot Contessa Cookbook, just two years ago, Ms. Garten has turned her attention to "parties." In her new cookbook, Barefoot Contessa Parties, (Clarkson N. Potter, $32.50), the format is broken down into four sections with menus to compliment the seasons.

Ina Garten clearly loves to entertain but it didn't all happen easily. She takes you through some of her triumphs and amuses you with her realistic mishaps. Her credo, no matter what happens, is to have fun. And fun is the key word to Parties.

If you have found entertaining intimidating, fear no more, Ms. Garten's simple style is both encouraging and infectious. Not every party, she tells you, has to be in the dining room at a formally set table. "Surprise your guests – and have dinner in the study by the fireplace, or take a group of friends to the beach in August and serve lobster rolls and brownies that you bought at a bakery." There are mouthwatering pictures throughout the book (some of the best food photography I have seen) to further inspire you.

I'm a sucker for potato chips and there on page 77 are the most luminous and elegantly presented chips, their edges dipped into a bowl of salmon caviar. The chips are not fried but baked and were a big hit with a couple of neighbors who helped me test them. It seemed an appropriate time to follow Ms. Garten's lead to "Make Your Own Pizza Party." I prepared the simple dough in an electric mixer and it came together beautifully. The recipe calls for up to 4 cups of flour, 3 cups in the mixer added to the water, yeast, honey and olive oil with the extra cup added as needed, but I found that up to 1/3 more cup flour was sufficient for the smooth and supple results. We nibbled on the crispy potato chips while waiting for the pizza dough to rise. Several toppings were set out for the pizzas when the dough was ready. We divided the dough into 3 equal parts rather than the 6 for practical purposes and joyously played with the combination of toppings. Our informal, last minute "pizza party" was a hit. To raise the fun quotient even higher try the "do-it-yourself ice cream sodas" for dessert.

Ms. Garten's first book has sold over 175,000 copies to date; a remarkable achievement in just two years. The recipes in Ina Garten's new cookbook, like the products in her store, The Barefoot Contessa in East Hampton, is filled with best sellers.

RORI'S POTATO CHIPS

"And they're not even fried"

I sliced the potatoes on an inexpensive metal mandoline to about 1/8-inch thick, which worked fine. A sharp chef's knife will do the job as well. To store the chips I recommend they be placed in a paper towel lined cookie tin for a day or two.

Serves 8

Good olive oil
4 large baking potatoes
Kosher salt
Freshly ground black pepper

Preheat oven to 325 degrees

Spread each of 2 baking sheets with 1 tablespoon of oil and put them in the oven to preheat for 10 minutes.

Slice the potatoes on the narrow opening lengthwise of a mandoline so they are thin and flexible, about 1/16 inch thick. [Note: 1 1/16" slices may be difficult to achieve if sliced with a knife. Just slice them as thin as possible.] Place slices on the hot sheet pan, making sure that they don't overlap at all. Sprinkle with salt and pepper.

Bake the chips for 10 minutes, rotate the pans in the oven, and bake for another 10 minutes. Flip each chip and then bake for another 5 to 6 minutes or until golden brown. Remove the chips to a paper towel to cool. Repeat with remaining potato slices.

CALIFORNIA PIZZAS

"When Alice Waters opened Chez Panisse in Berkeley California, her use of fresh, local – often homegrown ingredients – revolutionized the American food world. When she opened the café upstairs at Chez Panisse to make what we now think of as California pizzas, she changed our idea that pizza was just a crust slathered with tomato sauce and chewy mozzarella. Make this dough ahead and let your friends assemble their own pizza."

For the dough

1 1/4 cups warm (100-120 degrees) water
2 packages dry yeast
3 tablespoons olive oil
1 tablespoon honey
3 1/3 cups all purpose flour plus more for kneading
2 teaspoons kosher salt

For the toppings (select 8)

1 red onion, thinly sliced
1 pound fresh mozzarella, grated
1/2 pound Italian fontina, grated
1/2 pound mild goat cheese, such as Montrachet, sliced
1 red or yellow bell pepper, cored, seeded and julienned
1/4 pound prosciutto, thinly sliced and julienned
1 bunch arugula, washed and spin-dried
6 plum tomatoes, thinly sliced
1 bunch basil leaves, cleaned and dried
4 garlic cloves, roasted
Crushed red pepper flakes

For prep

1/2 cup good olive oil
Cornmeal

For the dough, combine the water, yeast, oil and honey in the bowl of an electric mixer fitted with a dough hook. Add 3 cups flour, then the salt and mix. While mixing add flour, about 1/3 cup, or enough to make soft dough. Knead the dough on low to medium speed for about 8 to 10 minutes until smooth, sprinkling it with more flour as necessary to keep it from sticking to the sides of the bowl. Turn it onto a floured board and knead by hand 10-12 times. It should be smooth and elastic. Place the dough in a well-oiled bowl and turn it several times to cover it lightly with oil. Cover the bowl with a kitchen towel. Allow the dough to rest in a warm place, away from drafts, for 30 minutes.

Divide the dough into 6 equal parts and roll each one into a smooth ball. Place the balls on a baking sheet and cover them with a damp towel. Allow the dough to rest for 10 minutes. Use immediately, or refrigerate for up to 4 hours.

Preheat oven to 500 degrees.

If you've chilled the dough, take it out of the refrigerator approximately 30 minutes ahead to let it come to room temperature. Roll and stretch each ball into a rough 8-inch circle and place them all on baking sheets sprinkled with cornmeal. (You will be able to fit 2 pizzas on each 18 x 13-inch baking sheet.)

Brush dough with olive oil and add any toppings you wish, piling them high. Drizzle each pizza with 1 tablespoon of olive oil and bake for 15 minutes until the crust is crisp and the toppings are cooked.

Writers Note: I baked the pizzas at 450 degrees rather than 500. I found this to be a suitable temperature for my ovens. The pizza crusts were thin and crisp.

HAMPTONS NIGHTLIFE WITH CHRISTINE CARROLL

This past weekend was packed with summer energy. Everywhere we went was crowded. Friday night we checked out a bunch of places in Montauk. We started at Shagwong, which was, as always, loaded with people. After that we went to the Shark Shack and heard the most beautiful voices coming from the karaoke machine! While walking to The Point we stopped into The Memory Motel and felt the presence of The Rolling Stones. Sunday night we checked out Serafina and found out that they have a martini hour! That sounds wonderful. La Superica was our next stop and after a margarita or two we called it a weekend.

How To Choose An Interior Designer

By Susan Simm

There certainly was a time when interior designers were employed only by the very rich. If you didn't travel in circles where people coo, "Oh, I just love what your designer's done with the wallpaper," chances are you browsed through issues of Better Homes & Gardens while standing on line at the A & P., hoping to find a duplicate of your house there with guidelines for how to transform yours into the one in the picture. For $500 or less. Or, if you really wanted to punish yourself, you could plunk down $5 for a copy of Architectural Digest and really see what could never be possible in your less than 10,000 square foot home.

Even though we've come a long way in many other respects, some people are still reluctant to hire an interior designer, either because they feel that they can't afford it or because they worry that they'll lose control when the designer tries to force his or her will on them.

Today, with a trained professional, neither of these issues need cause concern.

First of all, the days are thankfully gone when a designer would sweep into your home and announce to you that "everything must go!" and that you then had to follow every suggestion he/she made if you wanted to achieve the current, trendy styles.

Designers today work with what you have because, like it or not, the things you own reflect your personal taste. Additionally, we have gotten away from real trendy interiors and have allowed personal expression more freedom. And as far as the issue of not being able to afford to hire a designer goes, the fact is that hiring one when you are faced with furnishing either a room or an entire house can actually save you money. Remember how that weathered, aqua-stained, rosette-covered armoire looked so fabulous in the Ethan Allen showroom? And then how awful it looked sitting next to the natural pine farm table in your traditional dining room? Eclectic style can only carry you so far and, often, one mistake alone can pay the designer's entire tab.

So, now that you've decided to hire a designer, how do you go about it? To begin with, it is important to differentiate between "designer" and "decorator": this is more than semantics. A decorator is a person with a flair for creating beautiful rooms and they can either be trained or just naturally good at their job. A designer is professionally trained to not only create beautiful rooms but also to assess the use, function and safety of interior space; they can develop designs and prepare drawings using specialized knowledge of design, furniture, fixtures and construction and often hire and supervise a group of subcontractors, depending on the size of the job. In addition, designers that are members of ASID (American Society of Interior Designers) have achieved "the highest mark of the professional standard of design," according to that organization.

One way to find a designer is to find a room you really like and then find out who designed it. The room could be at a friend's home, part of a designer showhouse, a furniture showroom display or in a photo spread in a magazine. Another possibility, and perhaps the best, is by word of mouth. When someone is good at what they do, word generally gets around. This method will also provide you with references from people you know and trust.

Once you have found someone whose work you admire, the next question to ask yourself is, how do I feel I will get along with this person? Were they on time for an appointment, a sign that they respect your time, and are you able to communicate your needs and desires clearly without feeling intimidated? The designer will not be able to create the perfect room for you unless you can communicate what you want. And finally, does the designer really listen when you discuss these matters and offer feedback based on what you've said? If he/she doesn't listen to you during your first meeting, this alliance will most definitely not improve.

Fees charged by designers vary locally, regionally and from designer to designer. It is important to understand both what the fees will cover and that these fees are for services rendered, not products. Designers will charge by either a fixed rate for an entire job or hourly, depending upon the job and whether it is commercial or residential. Make sure that these arrangements are made in advance and are clearly understood.

The best advice you can receive about dealing with a designer, as with any professional, is that, after you've done your research and met the person in a face to face discussion, trust your instincts. If something doesn't feel right, the only place in your home to show them is the door.

Interior Design Island Paradise

By Susan Simm

Formal dining rooms are becoming dinosaurs, especially out here near the sea. The East End is a place where many people come to relax and entertain in a casual manner. Informal clambakes, BBQs and spontaneous get-togethers for cocktails and a simple meal made with our wonderful, fresh local ingredients are often the order of the day.

This type of entertaining doesn't require or even lend itself to a formal dining room.

But unless you have built a new house with a large, airy open kitchen, you have been faced with remodeling a smaller kitchen (the most popular room for people to renovate; they often combine a dining room and the kitchen to create more space) or finding ways to make your smaller kitchen work

Gone are the days (thankfully!) when guests sat stiffly at a formal table while the host or hostess fretted in a kitchen behind closed doors. Entertaining in kitchens has become extremely popular and guests are actually invited to help prepare the meal. The Barefoot Contessa's Ina Garten has just come out with a new cookbook, Barefoot Contessa Parties, that celebrates this entertaining style. Enjoying a glass of champagne while tossing a salad or assembling hors d'oeuvres with friends is a lot more fun than sitting around waiting for dinner.

But how do you set the kitchen stage for guests to become a part of your meal preparation? The perfect solution, for almost any size kitchen, is the ever-more-popular kitchen island.

An island can incorporate a sink, a cooktop, storage and refrigerator drawers as well as provide counter space. If your kitchen is on the small side and you don't want to spend the money for a major renovation, redesigning your space to include an island is still possible by moving, say, your stovetop and your sink away from walls to create more space for your island. Even if your kitchen is tiny, a peninsula can jut out

EAST END FARMING WITH JOE GERGELA

Finally, it's beginning to look and feel like Spring! When our boys and girls don't want to play soccer and baseball outside, you know it's cold. The last several weekends required winter coats while we watched the kids play ball.

It's been an interesting week at Long Island Farm Bureau with many meetings and different issues to deal with. Southold Town held an "informational" meeting regarding their five acre zoning proposal. There was a good amount of dialogue between the farmers, landowners, members of the business community and the town board. I felt a lot better about the issue as it was clear the process to examine the pros and cons of an upzone was at its infancy. There is no silver bullet to stop development pressure on the East End, or to achieve 100% preservation. We must use all of the tools at our disposal and then some "outside the box" thinking to avoid unintended consequences of public policy. In our experience, large lot zoning just uses up the land quicker. Just look at the Hamptons where they have had large lot zoning for years. Now, there are so few farmers left and the land is very valuable, the Group for the South Fork and others (mostly their supporters) want even further restrictions on land use to maintain their "vistas." I don't know too many families and their children who might want to build a house and reside on the East End who can afford a five acre lot, or mini estate.

The bigger issue is the fairness issue. The farmer landowners have provided "open space" for free for their neighbors and general public to enjoy. Now they are being asked to reach into their back pockets, their life savings, their retirements, to pay for this public benefit. In fairness to Supervisor Jean Cochran and her board, they have always been supportive and understanding of farmers needs. The board is under pressure to consider remedies to protect farmland, the environment, future groundwater supply, and also reduce potential residential density - a huge public policy goal and very laudable. We all want the same things for the East End, the question is how, and at who's expense. Jean and the board listened very carefully to the public input and I am sure will work with the stakeholders as things move along.

In Southampton the issue is going to public hearing on Tuesday of this past week. The farmers and the town leadership have been working on the code amendments for nearly a year. No one is totally happy about the proposed amendments. Farmer landowners feel a lot of uncertainty with the proposal and are going on blind faith that their equity will be maintained. Only time will tell.

Another big item we have been involved with lately is the estate tax issue before the Congress. Farm Bureau supports total repeal of the tax as we believe farmers and their families already paid taxes throughout their lives, why should the government be entitled to the death tax? It is not likely total repeal is politically doable. Here on Long Island our feeling is to raise the exemption to five million dollars, fix the tax rates and adjust for inflation. That would certainly help out many

The Hampton Designer Showhouse

By Susan Simm

Plans are in full swing for one of this summer's most spectacular benefits taking place at the incomparably beautiful Villa Maria in Water Mill this July. The Hampton Designer Showhouse, benefiting the Siena Spirituality Center, will feature the work of over 30 top designers from many fields, including interior and landscape design as well as decorative artists that create such works as trompe l'oeil murals.

Among the notables are David Easton and Charlotte Moss, Michael Christiano, Gary Crain, Noel Jeffrey and Christopher Peacock, to name a few.

Among the landscape designers are Edwina von Gal, who will create the master plan of the property from which various landscapes and gardens will be designed along with Mac Hoak of Mecox Gardens, who will create a garden display that will include some of their fabulous garden furnishings, both antique and modern day. Mary Gotovich, also of Mecox Gardens, will participate as well.

Situated on Water Mill's most magnificent 15 acres, Villa Maria was built in 1887 as a private residence and remodeled and expanded in a Beaux-Arts style in 1910. Since 1931, it has been owned and operated by the Sisters of St. Dominic of Amityville. In 1991, the Siena Spirituality Center at Villa Maria was founded. The center offers extensive programs in the arts, spirituality and education to all members of the community.

farm families while the very wealthy would pay based upon the tax rates. When we were in Washington several weeks ago, we shared our views in particular with our New York senators. The battle will be in the Senate so we would rather see compromises than lose the entire issue.

So much to do, so little time. Off to Albany this week to follow-up on state issues. Stay turned.

In addition to the individually designed rooms, some of which will remain as permanent installations, there will be a lecture series featuring big names in the design world, such as top designer Mario Buatta and John Loring of Tiffany & Co.

The three week event will kick-off with a Gala Cocktail Party on June 30 and will run through July 22.

Catherine di Montezemolo will Chair the Showhouse along with Co-Chair Barbara Moller. Mrs. H. Virgil Sherrill is Honorary Chairman of the Gala with Catherine di Montezemolo and Ann Swint acting as Co-Chairmen.

In addition to benefitting Siena Spirituality Center, proceeds will also go towards restoration of Villa Maria.

About Face: No Brow Beatings Here!

If one thing other than eyewear frames the eye it is the eyebrows. The shape and density of them either makes or breaks your look. We have gone through as many different shapes of brows as we have hairstyles. From the pencil thin look of the twenties to the full natural brow of the late 70s and 80s back to thin brow again. Finally though, it seems that it has landed on the idea that whatever looks good on you, wear! I never ceased to be amazed at the different looks the models have chosen to go with at the moment. But for some, there comes a time when the ravages of overplucking and just plain age has rolled around. Some eyebrows can stand a little filling in to get that shape back. Perhaps even an entirely different look to compliment your makeup.

The rule of thumb is the eyebrow should begin above the inner corners of your eyes and extend just beyond the outer corner of your eyes. What goes on in-between sometimes is what I would like to address here. There are several ways to fill in the brow. There are brow powders, pencils and a new product I recently came across, I would call it a brow wax. Brow powders tend to be just that, powders and they don't seem to stay put for very long.

They can be brushed off with the unintentional swipe of getting your bangs out of your eyes. Pencils can be too sharp looking, that is we tend to 'draw' our brows rather than stroke them in. In the hands of a professional makeup artist, you can be shown how to achieve great looking brows with pencils. I like to use several shades of well sharpened brow pencils. Each stroke should be laid down individually rather than put down as a flat color, alternating the different brow colors as you go along. Pencils can be a great tool for filling in and even outlining a new shape.

The brow wax I mentioned above is a great compromise between the two methods, in that it stays put and yet lends itself to a natural appearance. The product I tried was BROWZING by BENEFIT. I used the dark and light in combination and the effect was perfect. It comes in a little compact with a tiny little tweezer and slanted brush to aid in a perfect application. The brush is rather stiff opposed to the softer ones, making it ideal to apply. It outlasted the

POLICE BLOTTER

Jesus runs stop sign, hits Toyota pickup. No, not a tabloid headline, but what happened when Jesus Olivas Vintimilla of the Montauk Motel allegedly went through a stop sign in Northwest and his Volkswagen hit the pickup driven by Jose R. Inga.

A patron at the East Hampton IGA received a $10 counterfeit bill in her change from a purchase. The bill was hardly the work of a master counterfeiter: it consisted of the body of a $1 bill with the sides of a $10 bill. How the counterfeiter planned to make any profit by pasting $10 bills on $1 bills is anyone's guess.

Being a poor speller blew a scheme for getting a prescription of Vicodin. Someone was so desperate for the painkiller (often used for tooth pain) that he or she stole a prescription pad from the office of Dr. Burrascano in East Hampton. Apparently the pharmacist to whom the prescription was presented had his suspicions about it. The DEA number was incorrect and Vicodin was spelled incorrectly. When contacted, Dr. Burrascano said he had no patient by the name on the prescription. And the doctor's signature was a forgery. The unnamed bearer of the prescription was charged with petit larceny and forgery.

A Rocky Point motorcyclist in Hampton Bays was stopped by police for driving erratically. But police were stopped from administering a sobriety test, because the suspect commenced vomiting after he was pulled over.

In East Hampton, a burglar who broke into a home with expensive electronic equipment ignored the valuable booty and instead made off with a $100 Walkman and $30 in coins.

A certain gentleman in Southampton Village was subject to an unexplained anger towards trash receptacles. He was charged with disorderly conduct for yelling, swearing and kicking over municipal garbage cans, on Jobs Lane, no less.

And then: shopping car rage? An anonymous caller related to police that a Jeep in East Hampton's Reutershan parking lot was driving into shopping carts. There are no suspects at the present time.

Black holes in Riverhead? Well, not quite the stellar events of astrophysics, but a mysterious hole for purposes unknown had been dug on the property of an Osborne Street resident.

A DWI and he wasn't even driving. But he was in the driver's seat with the keys in the ignition and according to state law that shows intent. What happened was the police responded to a call about a possible quarrel on Toilsome Lane in East Hampton, and found two men arguing violently in a car. The gentleman in the driver's seat appeared to be drunk and was indeed found to be so, when sobriety tests were administered.

Someone in Water Mill needed a smoke and some sweets. The Deli on Montauk Highway told police that in the middle of the night the deli was broken into and several packs of cigarettes and bags of candy were missing.

No footprints in the sands of time. An unknown individual broke into the scale building at the North Sea Transfer Station (in other words, the dump) and made off with about $200 in cash and then had the cunning to obliterate away any footprints made on the way out.

New York State Troopers arrested a resident of the Shinnecock Reservation for allegedly robbing a teenager waiting for a bus in front of the reservation smoke shop. Police recovered a camcorder and $20 in cash that had been taken from a fifteen year old during the robbery.

After police had arrested a Bridgehampton man on Huntington Crossway for becoming violent in a domestic dispute, the man - who had also injured two officers in a scuffle - kicked out the rear window of the police car in an effort to escape. However, the gentleman stayed put in the end, and was ferried to Southampton Hospital for what he had suffered in the fracas - the two officers had already been taken to the hospital.

from a wall and provide counter space where guests can stand on the other side of it and still participate in meal preparation.

If space is no object, multi-level islands often accommodate eating areas, wine racks, cookbook shelves, bar sinks, pot racks and more. But it is important to keep in mind the following measurements when planning your island's placement. Allow a minimum of 36-42" as a walkway between existing cabinets and the island. It can be located closer to plain walls (36"), as may be the case described above where a sink or stove top is relocated away from walls, but still needs to be further away (42"+) from appliances such as stoves, refrigerators and dishwashers so that you'll have room to open doors and maneuver around. An island's counter height can be the same as those of other countertops or it can be tiered to create a dining level, space permitting.

To see if an island would fit in your kitchen, stack up boxes to approximate the size and shape you're considering. Live with this for a few days to see how much room you have and, realistically, how big the island can be. If you constantly knock your elbow into a box, you will do the same with a hard, granite-topped counter with graver consequences.

Kitchen islands, like those in nature, come in such a variety of sizes and styles that you can almost certainly find one that works for you. Portable islands, such as freestanding or rolling worktables made of wood or stainless steel (like those in restaurant kitchens), are another option if space is an object.

powder and was a perfect companion to a pencil. I outlined the area to be filled in first with the pencils, creating a new arch above the center of the pupil and, using the slanted brush, filled in the new areas that I created with the BROWZING. Fill in your brows with a shade a little lighter than your hair color.

Your brows may also need some cutting. Looking at yourself with a mirror from all angles will let you know if you need to get those brows a little closer to your face. Combing the brows down with a brow brush, snip the brow that extend beyond the brow line itself. Going in the opposite direction of the hair growth, carefully trim them with a tiny well pointed scissor. Then brush both up and down and back and forth. Smooth them out to their final shape.

I like to use a baby shampoo to cleanse the brow. It's not harsh and will not burn if it gets into your eyes. They are hair, after all, and need to be treated as hair and not as your complexion. A little conditioner can be applied as a final touch, paying attention to a well rinse. The result are brows that are easier to guide into shape. With a little practice and using the right products, you will find that it isn't all that difficult for you to attain that perfect brow!
